

Il giornalino del Centro Nanà

Women's situation

According to us, the society we live in today is characterized by obstacles which might be even bigger than the society itself. Many girls, women and even little children are discriminated against since birth. An example? Work. Many children and girls are hampered by their parents and are obliged to act in a certain way. Once they grow up these “little girls” , hampered and influenced since birth, might be successful and be in charge of big companies, but still, the discrimination they had to go through as workers is real, one of the many examples of this discrimination is the different wage between men and women who have the same job.

It is very usual for women to choose part-time jobs in order to have more time to devote to family and household care, it's quite unusual to witness a woman coming home late from work. The society usually leaves to women the care of the elderly, indeed all the women are “forced” to take care of their family once they have grown up.

Il giornalino del Centro Nanà

At the beginning of the 20th century feminism mainly aimed at women's juridical freedom. Shortly before 2000, “radical feminism” was born; it is a feminist movement that wants to eradicate all the rottenness in our culture, such as the objectification of women. To objectify a woman means to consider her a property. Because of this mentality, many men force the women they love to stay at home, taking care of the children and the house, by doing so they prevent them from achieving an economic and social accomplishment.

Authors:

Alessia Musella
Vincenzo Gaingola
Francesco Esposito
Gianluigi De Martino